new grass had sprung up. Old Rover sniffed the air anxiously, whined and in other ways gave unmistakable evidence that he scented game. Will said: "Look out for eyes now, this is a favorite feeding ground for deer." We examined the sand which was bare in some places, and saw plenty of fresh signs. We moved cautiously on a few rods further, when Will stopped suddenly and looked earnestly to the left. I followed the direction of the gaze and saw a pair of flaming eyeballs not more than thirty rods from where I stood. Not a word was spoken by either of us. We both knew intuitively what they belonged to. Old Rover trembled all over like an aspen leaf. Will brought his gun forward, balanced it on the front end of the pole attached to the tripod, glanced through the vision and there lay a noble buck breathing his last. Six of the nine bullets had taken effect, four in his head and two in his left shoulder. We severed his windpipe, lashed his feet together and carried him home. Such was my first night's experience in fire hunting, and I sincerely hope this will not be my last. I had always considered it a species of pot hunting and had never thought I should enjoy it until I came to Florida and heard so much of its merits as a genuine sport. I should not now even wish to hurt deer in this way often, for I still think the fire hunter takes more pleasure in the chase, but to the lover of nature (and what true sportsman is not) a fire hunter must always possess a peculiar and indescribable charm, especially in Florida. No sportsman who visits this State should under any circumstances leave it without testing the merits of this novel sport.

Caution.

A WORD TO THOSE WHO USE POROUS PLASTERS. It is a universally acknowledged fact that BENSON'S CAPSINE POROUS PLASTERS ARE SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS. The great demand for them has caused a number of unscrupulous parties to make and sell worthless imitations under the name of Capsine or Capelin. As the market is flooded with inferior plasters selling at any price it is important for the consumer to know which is the best. It is well known that some of the cheap plasters have been examined and found to contain injurious ingredients which make them dangerous to use, causing paralysis and other diseases. All genuine BENSON'S CAPSINE PLASTERS have the word CAPSINE cut in them. SEABURY & JOHNSON, Pharmaceutical Chemists, New York. PRICE 25 CTS. Beware!

From our 5:30 A. M. Extra.

A terrible accident occurred last evening, the news of which flew like the wind till the outlines of the sad affair had been heard by many, causing a deep gloom and pressing anxiety to fall upon the feelings of a large portion of the community. The victim of the terrible accident was none other than Mr. Burr Robbins, whose reputation as proprietor of one of the largest show enterprises in the county, is hemmed in by no limits of city or boundaries of State.

It appears that Mr. Robbins had come up town in his little steamboat, and was on the homeward trip down the river at the time of the accident. His only companion was Richard Brooks, better known as "Sailor Dick," one of his employees. Mr. Robbins was at the wheel, and it being shortly after 6 o'clock it was quite dark, and he had not even the glimmer of a lantern to light the way. The boat passed under the Milwaukee street bridge in safety, and was speeding along at a rapid rate, with ninety pounds of steam on, when as it approached the lower bridge, and was about to pass under it, Sailor Dick called out that the boat was going

TO STRIKE THE PIER. Mr. Robbins with his usual quickness turned the wheel, just as the bow struck the pier. At almost the same time he turned around, his back to the bridge, and shot off the steam. In a second his head was caught between one of the braces of the bridge and the rim of the upright boiler, and he was crushed in this cruel vise. The steam gauge was broken and the steam rushed forth with a startling sound, which was heard for some distance, and the scene of the accident was speedily enveloped in the hot mist. Sailor Dick at once sprang upon the pier, and quickly climbed to the bridge above, and soon W. T. Vankirk and several others who had heard the dull thud of the boat and the escaping steam, came running to the spot. There was no time to waste in words.

Young Blay ran to the West Side engine house and hurriedly informed those there of the accident and bid them bring a rope. Assistant Engineer R. P. Young and Thomas Mahon, Foreman of the Hook & Ladder Company, at once grasped some rope and pike poles and ran to the spot. Sailor Dick went down into the boat and fastening the rope about Mr. Robbins.

THE INJURED MAN WAS DRAWN UP TO the bridge above. The boat had been so badly racked by the collision that it had already begun filling with water, but not rapidly enough to cause any danger from that source. Mr. Robbins' face and head showed that he was most terribly injured, but he was conscious, and stood upon his feet, with the support of those about him. He remarked that he was very faint, and bid his friends handle him carefully. A messenger had returned with Dr. Palmer's horse and buggy, and Mr. Robbins was at once taken to the Doctor's office. He appeared perfectly himself, and had complete control over his mental faculties, though his head had been frightfully crushed. His clearness of mind and his coolness while suffering from such a death blow were most remarkable. He seemed to fully realize that death was near, and yet the presence of this awful reality, coming so without warning, seemed not to appal him. He said that he was ready to go, but expressed the natural regret which could not but well up from the heart of so loving a husband and so kind a father, that he must part with wife and children. With the quickness yet calmness so characteristic of him under the ordinary circumstances of life, he proceeded

TO ARRANGE HIS BUSINESS MATTERS with a thoughtfulness and carefulness, even to details, which was most extraordinary. He at once sent for R. L. Colvin, of the Gazette, to whom he communicated some of his business affairs, and various wishes which he desired to have carried out after his death. Attorney William Rager was also sent for, and proceeded to draw up a will by which his large property was to be disposed of. He dictated his wishes in this with clearness as though no such deadly calamity had occurred. He gave some details of minor business matters which had occurred to him under such circumstances. Not only names but addresses, numbers of the street, and other like details were spoken of by him, and he mentioned everything which he deemed to be of consequence in settling his business matters.

Messengers had been sent to his home and the sad news fell like a crushing blow upon the family. His wife hastened at once to his side, and though night overwhelmed with the sudden sorrow, showed more than ever the womanliness and the strength of character which is hers. Mr. Robbins was at once removed to the Myers house, where he was placed in one of the parlors, and everything that skill and tenderness could do was bestowed upon him.

Dr. Palmer's examination of the injuries showed that the SKULL WAS HORRIBLY FRACTURED, extending over the whole front portion of the skull, reaching back nearly to the ears. The frontal bone which forms the forehead and portion of the top of the head was torn from its position, and the front portion elevated some two inches above the brain. The bones forming the upper part of the orbits of the eyes and floor of the brain were crushed into fragments, eight of which were removed, two being about an inch square, and the others smaller. The upper jaw was wholly separated from the skull, so that it was nearly as movable as the lower jaw. The bones of the nose were crushed in, and an opening was made into the brain. This opening was three-quarters of an inch in length and from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in depth, and through this the brain protruded. The back of the head was bruised somewhat, and some portions of the face and hands were scalded by the escaping steam. How a man thus injured could show such mental clearness and such coolness of judgment seems an even greater wonder to the few who gathered about him, than to those who listen to the narration from others. The injuries were at once pronounced fatal, and it was only left for friends and loved ones to show such tenderness in care, as the stern reality which seemed so near at hand, called forth.

SINKING OF THE BOAT.

The boat in which Mr. Robbins met with this terrible accident, and from which he was taken just as the water began oozing through its riddled hull, sank to the bottom of the river in about half an hour after it struck the pier of the bridge. It was a little propeller which Mr. Robbins had built in Chicago for his own use, and in it he took great delight in his leisure times, steaming up and down the river from his farm to the central portion of the city, serving himself as pilot and engineer, and which he used as a means of large proportions. It had an upright boiler and engine, and was compactly arranged, for just the purpose for which Mr. Robbins was accustomed to use it. Its cost was about $300, and it was as neat a little propeller as one could wish for.

HOW HE SPENT THE DAY.

Mr. Robbins little thought, as yesterday morning opened so sunny, of the sad closing of the day. As was his custom he attended the usual morning services at the Baptist church. In the afternoon he rode up in his boat from his home to hear Rev. Dr. Anderson's lecture at the same church. Afterwards he rode up to his dock in the rear of Heimstreet's store, and then down the river again, and then concluded to come back again. As he started homeward on this last sad trip, he was as usual full of his jubilant good nature, and asked Mr. Heimstreet to jump on board, and go with him, jocosely remarking that he would show him how nicely he could send that boat under the bridges. The invitation was declined with thanks, and Mr. Robbins, with a happy adieu started away for the home to which so soon such sad tidings were to precede him.

THE SORROW AND ANXIETY.

Up to a late hour last night there were many anxious inquiries concerning the condition of the injured man. In the parlor of the hotel where he lay, there were his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Colvin, and Dr. Palmer, who remained there the most of the night. Outside were many anxious to hear from time to time the latest news of his condition, and some of his fellow Knights of Pythias remained in the office throughout the night. There are few men in the community for whom such general and heartfelt sorrow would be manifest as for Mr. Robbins and the prominence of his position and the extent of his acquaintanceship throughout the country is such as will cause the sorrow to be felt everywhere, but here as nowhere else does the blow seem to be one which falls on the heart of each with peculiar sadness. Janesville has been for some time home to him. He has always shown marked interest in its prosperity, and has shown a friendliness toward the individual members of the community, which has won for him an affection and esteem greater even than can be felt elsewhere. With habits of life which have ever commanded respect, and with a generosity of heart which has ever won esteem, his suffering seems the suffering of all, hence at every turn one meets eager and anxious inquirers.

Mr. Robbins retained his consciousness to a remarkable degree. During the whole of last evening his mind seemed clear, though the bleeding from the wounds, and the terrible shock had their effect otherwise. About midnight he showed signs of wandering and remained in about this same condition with but little change, while wife, friends and physician watched through the anxious hours, and looking for the change which all felt must come, yet all so dreaded.

Mr. Robbins passed a much more comfortable night than was expected. At 6 o'clock this morning he was still fully conscious and remarked that he felt better than last night, but feared that death would ensue during the day. At other times he expressed himself as having hope unless inflammation set in.

Dr. Palmer has little or no hope for his recovery, but says he may linger twenty-four or even forty-eight hours, possibly longer, though death may come at any moment.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

From the Biographical Dictionary of Eminent Men of Wisconsin the following facts are gleaned concerning Mr. Robbins: He was born October 18, 1837, in Union, Broome county, N. Y., of which village his father was the founder. He received his elementary education in Brooklyn, Ohio, and spent the years 1853, '54 and '55 in the Baldwin University of the same State, becoming a superior English and mathematical scholar, and being also well versed in history and in several of the ancient languages.

In 1855 he left home with no capital or stock in trade aside from his brains, and the clothing which he carried on his back, and worked his passage on a steamboat to Milwaukee, and then struck out into the country to get work as a farm hand, but appeared so young and frail that he could secure no work, and started back to Racine, arriving there hungry and penniless. He sawed wood to pay for his supper, which was the only meal he had that day. He then started for Chicago, securing a passage by "stowing" himself on board a steamer and giving his only coat to pay his fare. In Chicago he was taken charge of by a sailor, who generously supplied him with what he secured work in a lumber yard at a compensation barely sufficient to pay his board. After working there several months, he went to Corunna, Mich., where he had an elder brother in business. Here he found employment in a hardware store in which he remained one year, and saved a little money, besides gaining some valuable experience. In 1856 he was appointed a civil engineer on the Detroit, Saginaw and Pere Marquette railroad, which position he held until the enterprise was temporarily abandoned, owing to the panic of 1857. He then moved to St. Louis, and for a few months was employed in Wood's Museum. Here he conceived the idea of entering upon the career in which he has been so successful. In 1859 he associated himself with a certain "Professor" C. C. Pratt, a Boston singer, and forming a concert troupe made a tour through Illinois. The times were hard, and the capital invested small. In one place they failed to have money enough to meet expenses. Instead of leaving and repudiating the debts, Mr. Robbins went into the harvest field, and earned money enough to pay the bills. That fall he started out as manager of a panorama of the revolutionary war, and continued this business with success until the breaking out of the rebellion. In April 1861, he enlisted in a Cleveland regiment, and went with his command to Clarksville, Virginia. His business qualifications, education, and ability soon attracted attention, and he was placed in charge of the transportation department at Gen McClellan's headquarters. At the close of 1861 he was appointed wagon master of General Terrill's brigade of artillery, then stationed at Mumfordsville, Kentucky, and given thirty days leave of absence. Meantime he returned to Ohio, and January 20, 1863 married Miss Lizette C., daughter of Hon. John A. Ackley, who for many years was Superintendent of Public Works in Ohio. Two days after the marriage he left for the front, and was afterwards promoted to the position of master of transportation of the twenty-third army corps, commanded by General Schofield, in which he remained until the close of the war. It is worthy of note that he was first a sergeant in the regiment of which President Hayes was Colonel. He was as true a soldier as he has been a citizen, and his record is one of which any one might feel proud.

At the close of the war he organized a variety troupe and gave entertainments in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, meeting with fair success until 1867 when he settled in Paw Paw, Mich., and engaged in merchandising, which he continued until the death of his wife in July, 1893. He sold out and lived retired until December, 1870, when he again appeared before the public as the manager of the National Pantheon of Paintings of the celebrated Bill D. T. Travis. He continued in this until June, 1871, when he purchased a small tent show, which he exhibited in Indiana and Michigan with fair success, and in the spring of 1872 he organized the circus and menagerie which has won for him such a renown, and which in his hands has proved so successful an enterprise. In 1874 he purchased the beautiful farm and buildings formerly occupied by the Rock County Agricultural Society, about a mile south of the business portion of this city, and where he has made his home in company with his present wife (nee Miss Nett Webster) to whom he was married in December, 1871, at Lawrence, Mich.

HOW IS MR. ROBBINS? This query is upon the lips of many, and in the thoughts of more, and there seems to be no lessening of the intense and sorrowing anxiety, which has pressed so heavily upon the heart of the community for nearly twenty-four hours. To-day his condition has remained unchanged to all appearance, and up to 4 o'clock this afternoon he was still in possession of his mental faculties, but appears to be gradually weakening.

During the day telegrams have been pouring in both from the East and from the West, coming from business acquaintances and friends, anxiously inquiring as to his condition, and expressive of warm sympathy for him and his. Having been informed of the sad occurrence by telegrams sent over the wires by the press last night, these numerous friends, scattered all over the country, join with those within the nearer limits, in anxiously waiting for the result. To all these inquiries there is but one sad and oft-repeated answer "no change."

It was hoped that it might be possible to remove Mr. Robbins to his home to-day, but the unfavorable weather, and his present condition are such that it is deemed advisable to let him rest where he is.

ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK, best accommodations, reduced prices.

A FULL HOUSE.

Lapin's hall was crowded on Saturday evening, at the Holiday Bazaar given by the ladies of the Trinity Episcopal church. Early in the evening supper was served in Apollo hall, and there too was placed the art gallery which furnished much fun. Later in the evening Madame Jarley's wax works were shown in Lapin's hall. There were a very large number of figures shown, almost too many, but many seemed to find delight in them. Mrs. McHenry gave the necessary explanations. Between the showing of wax works there was music, Prof. Titcomb and Miss Mary Fox playing an instrumental duet, Mr. J. D. King a solo, and Miss Lucy A. Barrett, of Rockford, gave "The Creed of the Bells." It was very finely rendered indeed and captured the audience, who applauded her most enthusiastically. She responded to the encore with "Pyramus and Thisbe," which in her hands seemed as new as though freshly written. Charlie Patterson gave a comic song "Peter Gray," which won for him a hearty round of applause. The ladies can certainly congratulate themselves on the success which they gained in the entertainment.

—Johnny Dyer is taking a few days rest from railroad, having been somewhat shaken up by a mis-step while alighting from his engine.

—The Guards have at last got their money, which they won in a prize drill at the Fair grounds last July. It amounted to $100 and $35.72 costs of suit.

—A. E. Morse goes to Milwaukee to-morrow to play a series of games of checkers with Captain Lund, who ranks as one of the best, if not the best player in the State.

—The next lecture of the Y. M. C. A. course will be delivered by Rev. T. P. Sawin, in Cannon's hall January 28. The subject will be "The Zulu War," and the admission only a dime.

—Dr. Buckmaster, who was for a time a student in Dr. Palmer's office, is in the city again, having returned from New York, where he has been spending some months. He intends going to Madison to-morrow to pay his respects to his friend Dr. King.

—Yesterday afternoon at the Baptist church Rev. Dr. Anderson delivered a lecture on "Science and Prayer." The audience was very large and very attentive, and those who listened to the lecturer pronounced it a much abler one even than delivered the preceding night.

—Those who have any old clothes to spare should leave them at John Davis' store at once, as he wants to pack the boxes, which he is to ship in response to an appeal for help, the particulars of which were given in the Gazette of recent date. Those who are suffering need the clothes now, and there should be no delay.

—Yesterday the first dinner was served at the Grand hotel, of which T. J. Saltsman is the proprietor. A number of our leading citizens gathered at the board in compliment to the new enterprise, and were fully repaid. The dinner was really a sumptuous one, everything being neat, tempting and beautiful. The bill of fare, besides the first course, garnished oysters, comprised two kinds of soup, two of fish, sixteen of roasts, six of boiled meats, ten entrees, four of relishes, four of cold dishes, thirteen of vegetables, six of pastry, eight of desserts, and seven of dessert, making seventy-nine dishes from which to select a dinner. Its variety was fully equalled by its quality.

BOLD ROBBERY.

One of Janesville's Young Men Slugged in the Streets of Beloit.

Last Saturday evening George F. Marquette, the foreman in Steven's cigar factory, drove to Beloit on business, and while on the streets there between eight and nine o'clock, he was assaulted suddenly by three men, who struck him with a sandbag or some such weapon, knocking him senseless, and in this helpless condition he was robbed of $254. The City Marshal came along and found him lying there and removed him to the Commercial hotel, where he lay in an unconscious condition until about 2 o'clock yesterday morning. There were several bruises upon the face showing where the blows fell, but no fracture was discovered. Still it is feared that the injuries may prove quite serious. About 4 o'clock yesterday morning he had recovered so far as to be able to drive to his home in this city, but it was doubtless an over-exertion, for he has since suffered much pain from injuries, and has some fever. Dr. Chittenden was called in to attend to his needs.

Mr. Marquette says that he noticed that he was followed, but did not think that anyone in Beloit knew that he had any amount of money about him, as he had not exposed his roll, as far as he can remember. He was paid a small amount of money by a Beloit man, and possibly this might have given him the clue. He thinks he will be able to identify his assailants, but thus far no arrests have been made.

It is a great thing to have what is called nerve, and nothing contributes more to the power of physical control than named than Warner's Safe Nerve. It also relieves all kinds of pain, and cures headaches and neuralgias.

THE CHINESE MUSTN'T GO.

An Earnest Appeal in Behalf of the Celestials by Rev. Dr. Anderson.

In accordance with the announcement made, Rev. Dr. Anderson, President of the Chicago University, delivered his lecture on "The Chinese Question," in Cannon's hall, Saturday evening. There was a fair sized audience to greet the learned gentleman, who was introduced by N. Dearborn, President of the Young Men's Christian Association, under whose auspices the lecture was given.

He opened his lecture by comparing the ideas gained of it years ago. He then picked up the cry of "The Chinese must go," and showed up in a rather unfavorable light the spirit of the party which was using this cry for political purposes. It sprung from communism, and he took occasion therefore to deal some heavy blows to this, showing up its fallacies in a very amusing manner. He then took up one after another of the objections raised against the Chinese, showing the fallacy of the cry about cutting wages, the protest against their seclusiveness, their heathen customs, their uncleanness and their lawlessness, and presented many figures and facts which did away with these objections.

The speaker showed also the manner in which the Chinese in California had been maltreated and subjected to unjust laws, formed for the evident purpose of oppressing them and driving them away. He ably defended them and paid a pleasing tribute to many of their characteristics, and to the work they had already done on the Pacific slope.

He spoke of the evident providence that there was in having the east filled with those foreigners who came from lands where the climate was very similar, while the Pacific slope with its wet and dry seasons was being developed with those who came from a country having just such seasons. He handled the question also upon the broad basis of political economy and of national liberty. His lecture was replete with interesting facts and a spirit of earnest charity, in behalf of these people. All who heard the lecture were highly pleased. It was instructive, full of thought, and graced with a freshness which made it attractive, though the theme was an old one.

The use of St. Jacob's Oil is indeed followed by the most wonderful results. More than a dozen cases have come to my knowledge, where St. Jacob's Oil effected speedy cures, but I will only mention one instance. A man suffering for twenty-four years from Rheumatism was induced to try the St. Jacob's Oil. He used a few bottles of this truly wonderful remedy, and is now entirely well once more. W. OBITUARY.

MRS. ELLEN E. TUCKWOOD.

On the morning of January 18th, 1880, at a quarter past 12 o'clock, Mrs. Ellen E. Tuckwood, wife of William Tuckwood, departed this life at her husband's residence on Lincoln street in this city. She was the daughter of Sanford Williams and Lovilla L. Williams, and a niece of John R. Bennett. Her death brings sadness to all who knew her, and great grief to her immediate relatives and friends. There was a sweetness and mildness in her disposition and manner which endeared her to every one who made her acquaintance. She was twenty-three years old on the 20th of last November, and had been married a little upwards of two years, and was surrounded by everything to make the opening scenes of her married life pleasant and happy. Her disease was consumption, and for many days past she fully realized the slow but certain approach of death, which she contemplated with calmness and serenity, and without fear, arising from an unshaken and triumphant faith in the Savior, as striking as it was beautiful to behold. The brightness which illumined her face seemed truly angelic, and akin to that which gleams in the heavenly city, deeply impressing all who came to her bedside.

The darkness of death has sometimes been compared to the evening twilight, which makes all objects appear more lovely to the dying. But her death was more like the radiance of a beautiful morning, the harbinger of a day in which everything shall shine with a brightness that can never grow dim. Shortly before breathing her last she said to those standing by her, "I am dying," said Brother Edwin I am going home," alluding to the Congregational minister who had recently visited her. After saying to her mother that she had something to say which she could not find words to express, she added "I will be done." While her frail body was trembling on the brink of the grave, her soul seemed to be rising up, with the renewed strength of immortal life.

Such a death seems to demonstrate the truth of Seneca's words, "That the body is but the covering of the soul, and at its dissolution, the darkness shall be dispelled, and our souls irradiated with light and glory without a shadow, from whence we shall behold the darkness of earth beneath our feet."

The funeral will be held at the Congregational church on Tuesday, at 2 o'clock p. m., which the friends of the family are invited to attend.

An Elegant Preparation

designed to meet the public want for a harmless hair dressing and restorative, is found in Parker's Hair Balsam. It acts like magic, commencing at the very roots, removes dandruff and all humors from the scalp, and never fails to restore gray or faded hair to its original youthful color and beauty. Falling hair is immediately checked by its use, and it produces a growth of beautiful young hair, soft, glossy and luxuriant, that surprises everyone. These properties added to its exquisite perfume and purity of composition, render it the growing favorite at the toilet table everywhere. Sold in large bottles at only 50 cents and $1.00 by all first-class druggists.

CITY NOTICES.

One peculiar characteristic of Fellows, Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites is its power of decomposing the food in the stomach, rendering digestion and assimilation more perfect. This partly accounts for the rapidity with which patients take on flesh while using the article.

Even though this winter is not quite so severe as the one we had last summer, still Prentice & Evenson continue to sell large quantities of Collins' Cherry Cough Cure.
